The Refugee and Migratory Movements Research Unit (RMMRU), an affiliate of the University of Dhaka, has been functioning as a research, training, and policy advocacy institution since 1995. Its primary focus has been on migration, refugee, displacement and governance issues.

Movements of population have major policy ramification for Bangladesh. The country's economy is very much dependent on the remittances of migrants. Some movements impinged upon the national integration process of the country and others have affected bilateral relations. Therefore, research and information on all such kinds of population movements are essential for formulating effective policies. Since its inception, RMMRU has been conducting various researches in this field and over time advocacy, awareness campaign and training have become part of the unit's core activities.
